Analytics & Cookies

Supplement to section 9.1 - Effective 8 November 2026

Optional visitor statistics

This website uses Google Analytics 4 (GA4) to count visits and understand which pages are viewed. Analytics is optional and remains disabled until you select Accept analytics (or Accetta statistiche). Simply browsing the site does not give consent to Analytics. Rejecting Analytics does not affect the rest of the website.

Information sent to Google

After you accept, the Google tag sends Analytics events with information such as the page URL and title, referring page, browser and device details, and a pseudonymous browser identifier. Google receives this information to produce website usage reports. Advertising permissions, Google signals, and advertising personalization features are disabled in this site's tag configuration.

Analytics cookies

The first-party _ga and _ga_<ID> cookies help distinguish browsers and sessions. They are configured to expire up to 180 days after creation; the site does not refresh their expiry on each visit (cookie_update: false). Browsers may remove cookies sooner. This cookie lifetime is not a statement about how long Google retains previously collected Analytics events.

Remembering your choice

The website saves your acceptance or rejection in this browser's local storage under gc.analytics-consent.v1. The saved choice is valid for 180 days; after it expires, the website asks again. This preference is stored to apply your choice and is separate from the Analytics cookies. Clearing browser storage also clears the remembered choice.

Change or withdraw consent

Use Cookie settings (or Impostazioni cookie) in the website footer at any time. Choosing Reject analytics withdraws consent, stops subsequent collection by the site, and removes the accessible Analytics cookies. The page may reload to stop the loaded tag. Withdrawal does not automatically erase events previously sent to Google.
